- 1. A large number of finished parts for the former German airplane types He-lll and Ju-88 were stored at the Ubigau Airfield; also nine engines for these planes. About 30 engines for Fokke Wulf 190, which after World War II were stored at the Falkenberg railway station, were also brought to the Ubigau Field. In August 1953 these parts and engines were loaded and shipped to Rumania, according to the waybills.
- The former German Labor Service camp at Falkenberg is now used as quarters for troops of the barracks Volkspolizei. The camp accommodates about 620 men.
